Dutch Corner group earns Historians of Year honors

By Elizabeth Coyle
Gazette Associate Editor

IMLERTOWN— It's the burial ground of the woman known as Indian Eve. One of its chief neighborhoods was the location of an iron mine, and Dutch Corner once used to be dissected by railroad tracks.

The Dutch Corner History Group has been highlighting the rich heritage of this mostly farming community since it formed in 2009, but for its work to restore cemeteries and research the old school-houses, the group has been named Historians of the Year.

"Surprised and shocked," co-president Carl Sellers said of his reaction.

"I think it's pretty cool," co-president Frank Antonson added. "I think they're deserving."

Members of the Dutch Corner Historic Group have been recognized as the Historians of the Year by the Bedford County Historical Society. Among the efforts the group has put together are a book of photos of the old schools of the area and a restoration of 14 cemeteries. Members are, seated, from left, Allan Semanek, Nancy Semanek, Carol Morgan, Bonnie Harclerode and Nancy Hinson; standing: Bob Morgan, Alan Hammond, John Imler, co-presidents Carl Sellers and Frank Antonson; Donald Hoagland and Gary Sellers. Lora Sellers was absent for the photo.

The Bedford County Historical Society will honor the group at the society's annual banquet March 29.

The Dutch Corner group was born out of another group that wanted to gain historic designation for the area to ward off wind turbine development.

Sellers said the historic group wanted to stay away from politics and highlight the many historic features of the area which the group considers to be about seven square miles of Bedford Township.

Antonson said the rural area drew him back from the upper echelons of academia. A Harvard graduate, he decided to return to Bedford Township, become a teacher and settle at the farm his grandfather bought in the 1940s.

The residents of Dutch Corner are unique, he said. "There's always been a difference between Dutch Corner and the town of Bedford." The people who live in Dutch Corner "have an identity of their own," Antonson said.

Predominantly, the settlers weren't Dutch, they were German, Antonson said. One of the first settlers was George Michael Imler Jr., born in Germany in 1705, according to the group's information. Church records were written in German through the 1800s, Antonson noted.

The group is developing a tour of the area that will highlight the area's 14 school-houses and quarries, or their locations, as well as locations of the railroad, cemeteries, the Triplett Mill and other points of interest. It also has a website.

Sellers said the photo book of the area's school houses took about 200 hours of work. The organization originally was to sell 50 copies but had to reprint the volume which now has sold 200 copies and counting.

Nancy Hinson, member of the group, said her family tree has roots in the area that stem back to the 1700s.

Preservation is important to her, she said, "because my history is in Dutch Corner."

Rhett Funston, known to his co-workers as Spike, will celebrate 25 years with the company this year. He has been appointed operations manager of Bedford's south facility.

Ken Norris, a 33-year Bedford veteran, has been named operations manager for the north facility.

"We're thrilled to have these two excellent gentlemen in place," said Glenn Smith, general manager. "Bedford was founded on the core values of hard work, honesty and customer service, and both Rhett and Ken embody those values. As we celebrate our 40th anniversary, I can't think of better choices to be running our facilities."

Dutch Corner group honored as Historians of the Year ...

It's essential for the area's historians to preserve the narrative, said Guy Calhoun, Bedford County Historical Society board vice president and member of the committee that selected the Historians of the Year.

The Dutch Corner group, through the variety of ways members are sustaining the area's story, will allow subsequent generations to know about the iron mine, research their ancestors and celebrate the heritage of the area.

"The Dutch Corner group stuck out because they did such a variety of things," Calhoun said. The group not only restored 14 cemeteries but also maintains several of them. "Thinking of the labor and hours it takes, that says a lot about them," Calhoun said.

The group produced a map for the tour and also put up signs, marking the sites on the tour, Calhoun noted. "They've done so much. I don't think they're that large a group," Calhoun said.

The three-member committee unanimously chose the Dutch Corner group but Calhoun said he would have awarded all the nominees, if possible.

"I think it's just important for groups and individuals to preserve the history of Bedford County. It's slowly slipping away and if we don't preserve it, our grandchildren and great-grandchildren are not going to know why the county is what it is today."

The website is www.dutchcornerpa.com or www.dutchcorner.org. Information is available at the site for the "Dutch Corner Schools" book, available at $17 each.

Co-president Carl Sellers (left) and member Alan Hammond look through the before and after photos of the cemeteries the group has worked to restore. The group was recognized as Historians of the Year for their efforts.
